

Friday Forum: A Panel Discussion

Oct. 23 | 4:00PM | Room 4406

Critical University Studies and The English Department in Changing Times

What can an English department do to ensure a viable, progressive future for higher education in America? Panelists--scholars and public intellectuals--answer this question by arguing for a new kind of graduate education in the humanities, by examining the relationship between citizenship and literacy education, by recognizing the role race, identity politics and media play in scholarship and pedagogy, and by redefining cultural studies as a project for first year composition courses.

A Panel Discussion featuring Leonard Cassuto, Fordham University; Columnist, The Chronicle of Higher Education; Carmen Kynard, John Jay College, CUNY; Kurt Spellmeyer, Rutgers University; Mark McBeth, City College and John Jay College, CUNY; and Jessica Yood (organizer), Lehman College and the Graduate Center, CUNY.

Co-sponsored by Graduate Center's Composition and Rhetoric group (CompCom) and The Futures Initiative.

Reception to Follow